

LEVEL 4 - INSPIRING LEADER

TEAM LEADERSHIP. SITUATIONAL LEADERSHIP.

Learning how to be a leader, i.e. a person who sets an ambitious objective and motivates their subordinates to go in a chosen direction.

The first stage involves learning to specify a task correctly, then assess the level of a subordinate's readiness to perform this task.

The last element consists in selecting an efficient way to match one's behaviour in order to provide sufficient support for a subordinate.

Practicing individual skills with the use of situations taken from one's everyday experience in management.

COACHING CLINIC®, I.E. MANAGING THROUGH COACHING

Acquiring knowledge and skills in the scope of inspiring others to believe in their own success and making them achieve exceptional results.

Getting to know one's personal coaching style, which directly translates into effective communication with subordinates.

Implementing the coaching approach results in increased quality of work environment, through promoting innovation, improving results, developing and retaining best employees, improving communication in a company, increased motivation and employees' involvement in achieving corporate goals.